

Budapest, 1987

Budapest, 1987.

Two years before the fall of the Berlin Wall, a country in a phase of social as well as political upheaval. People seen on the street, people who dreamed of a change, of an "improvement" of their political and economic situation.

Today, more than thirty years later, we know that there has been a change, but at a price not imaginable at the time.

Many remained "on the street", left behind, because capitalism, compared to socialism, allows for an improvement from the point of view of welfare, but not for everyone.

If the social and political situation has improved, I dare not express an opinion.
